Evidence that Consumers are Skeptical About Evidence-Based Health Care

Health Affairs, July 2010

If consumers are more involved, the results can be

- improved adherence to treatment
- increased use of screening
- increased patient satisfaction
- better health outcomes, and
- lower health care costs
Patients and CER

• Research results that are credible, objective, and trustworthy

• Research results that take into account individual life circumstances

• Research that is guided by principles of evidence-based medicine
Patients and CER

• Separate CER from coverage decisions
• Make quality care the first priority of CER
• Avoid adverse consequences related to restrictions on access, quality, or safety
• Urge widespread dissemination and use of CER results
