Do health plans seek patient input when making specialty drug COVERAGE POLICIES?

A study published in the *Journal of Managed*Care and Specialty Pharmacy examining the practices of commercial insurance plans says no.

Researchers found:

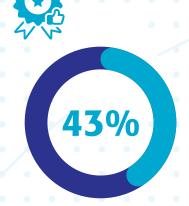

PLANS

- solicited patient input on their coverage-policy development procedures
- had a formal patient input process of plans said it was UNLIKELY their organization would seek increased input from patients in coverage decisions

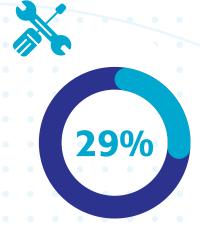

Health plan decision-makers cited barriers:

have difficulty accessing high-quality evidence from patients lack time and internal staff to obtain patient input lack tools to incorporate patient input into decision-making
